Project Introduction

This research explores how the exploration of urban food culture can act as a bridge between home and new environments for young people migrating within and across different regions or countries. With global migration on the rise, particularly among youth seeking education and career opportunities, this study investigates how food-related experiences help migrants maintain connections with their cultural roots while adjusting to new surroundings. Migrating, whether domestically or internationally, often comes with emotional and cultural challenges, such as homesickness and the need to adapt to unfamiliar environments. This research aims to explore the role food plays in helping migrants navigate these transitions, offering a deeper understanding of how food culture fosters emotional resilience and a sense of belonging in new places.

Interview Aim

The purpose of the interview is to explore how food and culinary practices in immigrant restaurants serve as a bridge between the home culture and new environments for youth migrating across regions or countries. Through interviewing restaurant owners or managers, we aim to understand how immigrant restaurants maintain cultural heritage while adapting to the tastes and expectations of new urban environments. Additionally, the interview seeks to uncover how these businesses contribute to the emotional and cultural well-being of young migrants by offering a taste of home and fostering a sense of belonging in a foreign or new city.

- I fully give my consent to take part.
- I understand that I have given approval for my opinions to be included in the research outputs. Anything I say may be used in academic papers relating to the project, although these quotations will be anonymous.
- I understand that I have given my consent for my likeness to be filmed and recorded and that this recording will be used for research purposes only.
- I have read the information sheet about the research project, which I have been asked to take part in and have been given a copy of this information to keep.
- What is going to happen and why it is being done has been explained to me, and I have had the opportunity to discuss the details and ask questions.
- Having given this consent I understand that I have the right to withdraw from the research programme at any time without disadvantage to myself and without having to give any reason.
- I hereby fully and freely consent to participation in the study, which has been fully explained to me.
